FIGURE 8.24. Eukaryotic gene regulation is generally much more elaborate than gene regulation in bacteria and archaea. Regulatory steps include transcription, RNA splicing, RNA stability (microRNAs), translation, posttranslational modifications, and protein targeting. Although each step is present in some bacteria and archaea, in eukaryotes the processes are more complex and diverse.

Evolution © 2007 Cold Spring Harbor Laboratory Press