

FIGURE 21.15. A substantial fraction of large genomes is derived from transposable elements. Both the number of copies (red circles) and the fraction of genome (blue circles) increase with genome size. Organisms with no mobile elements are plotted on the x-axis. (These data are from sequenced genomes of bacteria, archaea, and eukaryotes and so do not include large genomes.)

21.15, reprinted from Lynch M. et al., Science 302: 1401–1404, © 2003 American Association for the Advancement of Science