

FIGURE 24.1. A change in phenotype may be due mainly to the fixation of a major mutation of large effect (top). In contrast, it might instead be due to the accumulation of very many substitutions of small effect. The vertical axis in both figures shows the average phenotype. This changes continuously as the frequencies of the alleles that affect the phenotype change (bottom, inset).